tense annoyance and paintul disgust prevails not only in the stricter religions circles of the kingdom, but even in the clubs and the coteries of tesh ionable society in consequence of the recent doings of the Prince. Since the list of May, as all the world knows, this weak and foolish young man has been enjoying an almost endless round of festivities at Vienna, Presth and Berlin. It was remarked with chargin that during these fetes he acted more like a frivolous pleasure-seeker, to whom some new delight was a daily, almost an hourly necessity, than as a serious and sober-minded prince, heir to a great destiny. And it was remarked, with something more than CLEARED.
